

STUDENTS ACROSS THE GLOBE

People have been moving from place to place for many centuries and for many reasons. Today “migration concept” has gained a new dimension due to globalization. Globalization demands the internationalization of future workers. This leads to having more international students in education institutions. Therefore, nowadays migration and education are decisions that are intertwined. Internationalization and job prospects are the main motivations for student migration.

Globalization is the free movement of capital and information. Students want to benefit from globalization. They are aware of highly developed education systems in other parts of the world. Students expand their horizons by going to universities abroad and by becoming a part of a big network. This internationalization helps them forever; when finding new jobs, when travelling... Trying to adapt to different cultures gives students confidence and a chance to realize their abilities.

Cultural integration broadens someone’s job prospects. There is so much to confront when studying abroad such as finding new friends and socializing. These are intercultural experiences and help students to become world citizens. Students acquire marvellous qualifications while studying abroad. Anyone who puts on his or her CV that he or she studied abroad, gets a great advantage. This is a proof that the applicant can stand on his own two feet and can adapt to different environments.

All in all, migration for education in today’s globalized world is stepping-stone for internationalization and an investment in a teenager’s future career.
