

Another Species of Birds

There comes a moment in the life of every bird when it has to fly from parents' nest, aiming for a new habitat.

However, apart from ordinary birds, there is another species which is special in many ways. Its representatives can think by themselves, communicate with one another, and everyone has a unique personality. Nevertheless, hunting for food and shelter alone can no longer be the only option of a 21st century society represented here by a flock of special birds. Human nature is by far more complex and sophisticated that it can appear at first sight.

Both people and birds have their needs. Some even want to leave the past behind and have a fresh-new start in life. Others believe that most of their problems will be solved if they immigrate to a new territory.

Like birds, which search for a new warmer environment during winter, people seek new opportunities elsewhere. Social shortcomings, offensive politics, a weak economic system, deficient healthcare strategies will determine the migration of the population to wealthier countries with higher standards of life, overcrowding them and forcing them to adopt new sets of rules.

The resemblance between the movement of people and the movement of birds to different new locations is obvious. Leaving the nest and wandering around the world might be funny or rewarding for some but it is definitely not a recipe for happiness.

Moreover, let us remember that while birds come back to their native landscape after winter is over, most immigrants do not return to their spiritual roots. After all, in the long run even the Prodigal Son admitted that returning to his fatherland was the wisest possible solution, didn't he?
